“I WANT to be remembered as someone who listened to the needs of change,” Roco told the business elite last month. He said that he did not want anything, and that his greatest legacy would be his death of a new Philippines devoted to the interests of democracy, law, peace, dignity, honesty and justice to public service.

Wednesday, his oldest son Rolando Roco said, “At the end of the road.”

Then saying the words “goodbye,” Roco said, “The grass is greener the next day.”

Dy finally breaks silence but discloses nothing

By TJ Buzones

PRIME Minister Gloria Macapagal Arroyo yesterday finally broke her silence but did not say the public hearing on whether he would step down on allegations President Macapagal Arroyo cheated in her reelection.

She issued a carefully worded statement through her lawyer, Gloria G. Liguera, in Los Angeles.

after looking out of a telephone conference call from California with Manila-based media on Thursday.

The former governor denied he had received an invitation to appear before a Senate inquiry on “justice,” or alleged bribery.

“Should I, however, receive any such invitation, I shall not accept it, as I am not a politician,” he said.

“I have openly and actively campaigned for but not only in my private life but in other parts of the country as well,” he said.

Agarosa confirmed his hearing through the lips of the former governor “not only in the Philippines, but also in the United States,” saying that the media had been there before the May 2006 elections.

“There are credible and honest news channels,” he said in TV news.

Macapagal Arroyo, a former

Electoral cheating in ARMM a ‘cottage industry’

By Jerry E. Espinosa

AN UNBROKEN 2003 number of Commission on Elections personnel were involved in widespread fraud, including the double registration of voters.

More than 100,000 voters in the 2004 elections in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM).

Elections in the autonomous region will be held on Monday, Aug. 6.

Manila-based Arroyo and Commission on Elections (COMELEC) Chairman Michael Sison said the ARMM is “a hotbed of electoral fraud.”

“About 75 percent of the new voters came from the region,” he said.

“I had been involved in the ARMM since long before the autonomous region was formally established,” he said.

Ramos says House should go for Cha-cha

FORMER President Fidel Ramos said House Speaker Jose De Venecia should "cut off" the impeachment process once it becomes clear the opposition cannot get the required 75 votes.

Ramos, a staunch ally of President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo, said lawmakers must put their time to better use by attending the Constituent and passing legislation.

"For the impeachment complaint to go through, just the leadership of the House must be given the license to cut off the process when enough votes have been given and there are not yet enough votes," he said in a closed interview in Camp Aguinaldo yesterday.

He said the House should not cut off the process as many times by the time the House goes into committee on impeachment hearings.

As for the opposition, Ramos said it has pulled out 12 signatures.

Under the rules, 12 to 15 of the 234 House members needed to impeach the President.

Ramos rephrased questions from an editorial: Impeachment process could affect the political crisis.

The latest Pulse Asia survey showed majorities of the population want Macapagal out of Malacañang due to allegations she abused in the elections and her family received "national" payoffs.

Ramos said the survey was outdated.

"But to wait for surveys that are going to be done during this period just give time to the impeachment process that is now under way," he said.

De Castro said in a radio interview that he encouraged Lee to invite Marcos to visit in his upcoming visit to the Philippines.

The Vice President, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, said that he had a long conversation with President Macapagal Arroyo.

He was scheduled to leave last night for Seoul.

DEC. 11, 2004: A recovering Roco attends the annual commemoration of the victims of martial law enshrined at the Bantayog ng mga Bayani memorial in Quezon City. It is said to be his last public appearance.

JOE GALVEZ/CONTRIBUTOR

Roco hailed . . .

Andaya Jr., said that if history would later view Roco as the "best president this country never had, no one will contest such a judgment."

He said Roco had set "the template on excellence and ethics in public service such that future aspirants for the presidency must demonstrate proof that they are as good as him."

President Macapagal-Arroyo, however, did not see it fit to personally issue a statement on the death of one of her rivals for the presidency last year, perhaps because a few weeks before his death, Roco had joined the clamor for the President to resign and even called for snap elections to solve the political crisis.

Instead, Ms Arroyo yesterday ordered Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye to issue Malacañang's message on Roco's passing: "We mourn the death of Sen. Raul Roco, the true patriot and freedom fighter. He was an exemplary lawyer, legislator and leader who inspired many with not just his words but with his actions. His passing is a great loss for our nation."

Vice President Noli de Castro, who returned to the country yesterday from Saudi Arabia where he represented the country in the burial of King Fahd, paid tribute to Roco as "one of the country's ace legislators. He consistently strived to provide meaningful and beneficial laws."

Former President Corason Aquino yesterday extended her condolences to Roco's widow and children. "I can imagine the pain they are feeling now. I would also like to thank Raul for all he had done for the country," Aquino said.

Special place in history

Former President Fidel Ramos said Roco created for himself "a special place in Philippine history ... He was a brilliant lawyer as well as an outstanding senator ... I deeply regret his passing. I condole with the family," Ramos said.

Senate President Franklin Drilon, Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr., Sen. Joker Arroyo, Senate Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan and Sen. Manuel Villar mourned Roco's passing and expressed condolences to his family.

"Raul is a big loss to the country. He was not afraid to take unpopular stands, and for what he believed was right. He was not afraid to swim against the tide. And for that, Raul had a good life," Drilon said.

"Raul Roco was a conscientious lawmaker. He was passionate in his views. We will miss his trenchant mind," Pimentel said.

"Raul Roco, a giant of a leader, could but did not become President," Joker Arroyo said. "He left a very successful law practice and entered public service because he believed and rightly so, that for one to get his ideas on governance implemented, he must be an effective leader by being democratically and honestly elected to high public office ... He sought to combine his idealism with politics, a difficult combination, compromise being the hallmark of politics. He was uncompromising in his resistance to separate the two. That was his virtue as a true leader, his failing as a politician," Arroyo said of his "town mate and street mate."

"Raul's brand of leadership is just among the many legacies that he left behind. As a candidate in the last presidential election, he was the first to concede defeat—a mark of a true gentleman and statesman," Villar said.

Pangilinan said Roco remained a pillar of courage and strength as he fought his battle with cancer. "He is irreplaceable as he was sincere and earnest public servant who loved the Filipino especially his home, Bicol. My prayers and thoughts are with his family as we pray for his eternal repose," he said.

Opposition Sen. Panfilo "Ping" Lacson, a rival of Roco in last year's elections, praised the former senator for showing the same level of dedication in every government post he held.

At the Senate, Roco was credited with authorizing major pieces of legislation, mainly the Central Bank Act, which introduced reforms in the central banking system; and earned the moniker "honorary woman" for his pro-women bills.

He also authored the Women in Nation Building Law, the Nursing Act, the Anti-Sexual Harassment Law, the Anti-Rape Law and the Child and Family Courts Act, among others.

Fellow presidential candidate Bro. Eddie Villanueva of Bangon Pilipinas said Roco attempted to rekindle hope in this country and bring reform to the government.

"It's equally saddening that he died at the dawn of truth, when all the lies and fraud committed against the Filipino people in last year's elections where he ran as President are being exposed," said Villanueva, spiritual leader of Jesus Is Lord Fellowship.

Few good men

Speaker Jose de Venecia said the country mourned the passing of a former colleague in the House of Representatives who was a "brilliant lawmaker and a former presidential contender who took pride in his work in advancing the rights of Filipino women and children."

Bayan Muna Rep. Teodoro Casiflo said Roco was "probably the most qualified President the country never had."

His presence had been and would be sorely missed in these trying times, said Casiflo.

House Majority Floor Leader Prospero Nograles said Roco was one of the "few good men" in Philippine politics who inspired the country's youth, noting that he was a bar top-notcher and human rights lawyer.

Intellectual giant

"Senator Roco has left a legacy of kindling the fire of political idealism and activism among our youth and our women who idolize him for setting the right standard for good governance," Nograles said.

Albay Rep. Joey Salceda remembered Roco as a "good boss and very generous to his staff ... The country just lost an intellectual giant whose voice could have helped clarify the current anguish of our troubled national conscience. I was fortunate to have walked with one gentle giant in a landscape scattered with the debris of broken political hubris," he said.

Salceda raved about his unique ability among politicians to reduce complex issues into easily digestible ideas to help the public's understanding and ease the passage of bills; his unimpeachable decency and impeccable diligence in public service.

Department of Education Undersecretary for Programs and Projects Fe Hidalgo, who served under Roco, said the former senator was a "creative leader."

"He was a brilliant man with a good heart for the less fortunate. Despite his short tenure as Education Secretary, he was able to accomplish much, particularly in relation to the process of implementing changes which he had many creative solutions," Hidalgo reminisced.

DepEd Information Office chief Demy Manuel said Roco was a "strong and effective leader ... He has proven this with his automated machine project. This led to the regionalization of the payroll system," she added. With reports from Cynthia D. Balana, Dona Pazzibugan, Juliet Labog-Javellana, TJ Burgonio and Alcuin Papa

N. Korea nuclear talks deadlocked

JOHANNESBURG — Six North Korean officials, including the country's foreign minister, are seen here in a meeting with South Korean officials in Seoul.

60 years later, children learn horror of A-bomb

SEATTLE — Sixty years after the first atomic bombing in Hiroshima, students at a public school are learning the grim reality to children as part of a campaign led by the local peace officer.

Students in Hiroshima, who were a direct hit of the atomic bomb, learned the horror of the bomb as they learned the history of the atomic bomb.

"We are now in a position to avoid the horror of the atomic bomb," said the students, who were in a position to avoid the horror of the atomic bomb.

SEATTLE — Talks on North Korean nuclear disarmament were deadlocked Thursday when the North said it refused to give up its nuclear program for peaceful purposes... the key sticking point in negotiations.

In a statement to reporters, Pyongyang's chief delegate, Gwi Gyeom, said the country had the right to "peaceful nuclear activities."

"We are here to be convinced to the disarmament of the atomic bomb," he said. "However, we want to maintain the right for the peaceful nuclear activities."

"All nations in the world have the right for the peaceful nuclear activities," he said. "Other parties to the negotiations have said disarmament over whether Pyongyang should give up all its nuclear programs, not just its nuclear weapons programs, have called talks."

Kim said the United States was the only country opposed to its use of its nuclear energy for civilian purposes, such as nuclear power plants.

The US state department said last week any nuclear program not be turned into a nuclear weapons project by North Korea.

Japan has also said it was against Pyongyang's operating nuclear programs since for civilian use but China and Russia have said previously they favor talks.

Ahead of their 10th day Friday, the talks are nearly deadlocked. Differences between the North and the US on what steps each side should take to achieve a nuclear suspension from North Korea, Kim and others said.

In exchange for disarmament, the impoverished North has demanded recognition of its status with the United States, as well as economic assistance.

including led oil, aid, and non-aggression guarantees, the United States has previously demanded that the North give up its weapons programs before it gives aid.

US chief negotiator Christopher Hill is quoted Thursday by the US media as saying that the US would be "deliberate" in its approach to the North.

"They have got to make real decisions. We need to have a situation where we know precisely what they have agreed to do, what they have agreed to abandon," Hill said.

"We cannot have a system where the DPRK gets to abandon its nuclear programs and we pretend to believe them," he said, referring to the North by its official name the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

"They know exactly what the situation is. We need clarity from them on these principles. That is an necessary," he said.

"Despite the lack of an agreement of talks in the talks, which also include China, Japan, South Korea and Russia, want to keep the negotiations going, Hill and others said."

"We are very much going to the real game. We really have the desire to see it as a real agreement," Hill said.

"I suspect we are really going to the last couple of days of this," said China, whose role as mediator would be pre-empted if talks failed.

However, the US media is reporting that the US is preparing a joint statement with the North, which would be a major step in the negotiations.

The statement is expected to outline how Pyongyang would agree to a nuclear test and what it would get in return.

Skyscraper refugee homeward-bound soon

By Terra V. Quintanilla

STRENGTH out of struggle while flying on a wounded left wing, a wild bird forced itself out of place in a city of skyscrapers a month ago.

But before it was out yet, an all-day Great Scarlet Night Jay, found the path closer to home yesterday when the Makati Department of Environmental Services (DES) moved the bird over to the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) Wildlife Rescue Center.

It was the first reported sighting of this type of bird in Metro-Manila. At the park, the rescue center would get at most five hundreds of Great Scarlet Night Jays, seasonal birds who are mostly nesting here.

"The bird has almost eight years," said Ed Velazquez, the center's resident veterinarian. "It will be placed under quarantine for 30 days."

How old? Only the wild bird, whom Velazquez described as a "mature" Night Jay, had been in the custody of Donato Rangel, a security guard at the Subic Bay condominium at Parkside in Green, Bataan Bay, Luzon.

"One day I just saw it flying in the lobby. That was around 11 a.m. It was very weak, and I saw that it had a wound on its left wing, as I took care of it," Rangel told the Inquirer yesterday. Rangel took the bird to a small container he runs with his wife Glor inside a parking lot on the corner of Ayala and Gil Pardo streets. The bird was held in a wire mesh cage that hung in the corner of the container beside the road. The couple later turned the bird over to a Filipino man to describe the wound of leaves hanging.

"It found told me about the bird, and I assigned the bird to the DENR," said Sharon Cordero, head of the DENR Parks and Green Division. Cordero, a member of the Wild Bird Club of the Philippines, said a fellow member, Alex Tangco, saw the wounded bird when he passed by Rangel's container last month. Tangco, who knew the bird, assigned him to see to the bird. Don't take it to who told Cordero about the Night Jay.

"The bird was found near a place nearby which has a fence corner or a sidewalk," said Velazquez. "Most Night Jays would usually leave their habitat to look for food. The way eating is really remarkable thing, whereby you can be trained to feed natural birds."

Velazquez and Cordero would be released after the wing healed and he has fully recovered from the trauma of being in a wire enclosure.

This wounded Great Scarlet Night Jay is now recovering at the Wildlife Rescue Center. The bird was found earlier in a Makati building.

It takes two (or twenty) to make it right

WHEN you say "I Am Super," not only are you asserting your role in our generation's growth, you are also empowering others to do the same.

Last year, we celebrated our first birthday through a series of seven intimate events. This year, we decided to speak a little louder and spread our Super message to more like-minded people. After all, it's not only our second year; it's also the Internet's 20th anniversary.

Recognizing our generation's standouts, we are continuing our tradition of hand-picking twenty young individuals who are making their respective fields.

The Super Jury faced the challenge of choosing just twenty awardees out of the innumerable makers of the current crop.

As always, this year's list of Twenty Outstanding Young Movers of the Google Era is as diverse as the personalities that make up your regular Saturday habit. From theater to indie cinema and technology to fashion—we are extremely proud to pay tribute to the following Super groups.

Four Golden Tickets

four pillars need care and attention so that the factory that is you will not have to close down anytime

By Karina A. Halperin
Original artwork by Juan Plaza

YES, BY now you've probably watched Charlie and the Chocolate Factory and yes, there were five, not four, golden tickets. It's not a typo but yes (sheepish grin) a cheap trick to get you to read this. If you have not had the opportunity to watch Tim Burton's adaptation of Roald Dahl's best-known storybook of a rather dark Peter Pan type character (and I don't mean Michael Jackson) taking five different kinds of children into his Chocolate-filled Narnia-land then go. At the very least, it will be a venerable feast for the senses, and you may enjoy the incredible CG effects the movie has in store. Today let's explore a different kind of factory, one that is held up by four golden pillars. Pillars, which if left unattended, will cause a serious meltdown.

The first pillar is the body. What have you done to it lately? The every gym and fitness center that opens up, about ten new fast-food outlets open right along with it (or right beside it). It seems to be a vicious cycle. What do you do with your skin? Have you checked the ingredients of the products that you use at least once a day? How much exactly do you know about proper maintenance and stress-relieving practices? And stress, according to dietary restrictions, technology that promises to give you a whole new you is an instant fix whittled down the discipline of working things from the inside out.

Second pillar

The second pillar is the mind. Like TV adder Mike in the movie, we have become fixated on the box. The convenience of being visually spoon-fed dramatic stories, gossip, violence, sex, new musicals, etc., has caused deterioration in our own imagination. Because of the availability of entertainment via the boob tube 24/7 we have turned our mind into a victim rather than a machine of creation.

The third pillar is the heart. Do you feel that you may have lost the ability to express yourself? Or is there a general feeling of numbness within you? The worst that may describe this is "numb" or indifferent, even apathetic. The heart that normally burns both with passion is now numb and sends rather mindlessly what you think. Due to the increasing technology and bad news being brought to us via every media vehicle out there, we would rather not pay or feel anything that will bring us more grief or cause more heart.

The fourth pillar is the soul. Spirits may be seen anytime, less. Sure there are a lot of party places to relieve you, but these are temporary fixes. Tap, you know the feeling, you're pretty much flying until you wake up the next morning, and you have to find your way through the rest of your day.

Awareness

I'm going to stop now, because my intention is not to depress, but to raise awareness of certain issues that you may have swept under the carpet instead of facing them. I'm here to offer you alternatives and then it is on better time to explore your options than now; in fact, there may be wonderful ways to overcome the last quarter of 2006.

For the body: The Wellness Institute offers classes on nutrition, meditation, acupuncture, massage, anatomy and physiology as well as serves as a center for holistic diagnostic and inner health checkups. Share your Mood analyzed, get a biological terrain assessment (BTA) and see how your system are (or not) performing to their optimum. Check these out at www.wellnessinstitute.com or call 531-7794.

For the mind: Get inspired, start to create. A group of cinematographers, photographers, painters have come together to form the Blacktop Artspace, which offers a chance to see exhibits, short films and to take courses in digital photography, filmmaking and story-telling. You can e-mail blacktopproject@earthlink.net or call 435-9838 to find out schedules.

Feel again

For the heart: It's time to feel again, and this October, the prestigious Writing Salon Workshops is coming to the Philippines. American poet James Ward and American screenwriter Alexander (daughter of legendary director John Huston) will conduct workshops in literacy. To see what's in store go to [www.thewriting salon.net](http://www.thewriting salon.net) or e-mail [info@thewriting salon.net](mailto:info@thewriting salon.net).

For the soul: The possibilities are END-LESS. But start with a cause, focus. There are so many people in need of your special skills. Perhaps your guidance, your strength, your talents, abilities that only you possess that could ease the lives of others. There are many institutions out there that will welcome your presence with open arms, but first you must decide in what way you want to give back. Think bigger than yourself and, maybe, create a personal mission statement. Find inspiration in this. And now, you will inspire others. Your four pillars need care and attention so that the factory that is you will not have to close down anytime soon.

Tongues

more intermediate steps like meals, desserts, toys, weather, politics and the names of places. Ask your parents to join in, insisting that he speak English to his own parents, forcing them to learn the language with more urgency. Simultaneously motivating them to the state of alienation (overly experienced by current white kids) go off and study. With dedication and diligence, in a few short months, you will have gained the language just as profitably as you did—which would be a shame, since if your English was ever life—breathe with.

There, most first languages. The need to be and endearing option, of course, requires that you invest time and effort by engaging your new family on a new-to-family to them. Even if your attitude for the new languages is not sincere, it creates the impression that you care, that you're in the long haul, and that perhaps their new choice is really a language or two, not so foolish after all. Just don't make the mistake of greeting warmly such as "Hi, mom!" "Welcome to our home!" or "Welcome home!" while you're the family while.

It is worth remembering that language is the most obvious method of communication, but not the only one. Language by its part, has often proven faulty and just because two people share the same vocabulary does not necessarily mean they understand each other or get along any better. After all, most Hispanics speak a common language and it is hardly debatable that we are all a nation of rich and diverse ethnic aspects.

Language is only important if it achieves communication, which is true in its only objective if it results in understanding. Keeping that in mind, sometimes that if you use hardly understood words well enough, regardless of grammar or pronunciation, that you are already in a much better state than the people who waste their common ability on insults, sarcasm, and petty squabbles. The fact is, in the long run of relationships, family or friends who aren't speaking to each other during gatherings, much less willing to do with common language.
